In some strange way, moreover, the spirit of Edwards seems incapable of dissolution in all these generations of comminsied blood. It is held in solution rather, and throbs in the arteries of his most remote posterity. He was president of Princeton for only a few hiref weeks before his death, but in the five generations that have since had their entrances and their exits upon the stage of action, a college president has never yel been lacking among his direct descendants. More than this, many direct descendants who were disqualified because of the accident of sex have made college presidents of their husbands.

But the presidential family of President Edwards is not confined to colleges er universities. As members of this assonishing group, we find, it is true, presidents of ten colleges and universities—of Amherst, Hamilton, Rutgers, Union, Princeton (two), Yale (three), Johns Hopkins, Columbia, Carnegie Institution, and the University of California. Besides these, there are founders and presidents of two law-schools, two presidents of theological seminary, one of the Association of American Anatomists, one of the Boston Society of Natural History, a bank president, and a president of three railroads; and finally one vice president and one president of one vice president and one president of the United States. Here are letters, law, medicine, theology, science, commerce, finance, politics, and statesmanship, all officered—and head-officered, too—by the sons and sons-in-law of Jonathan

He married Esther, daughter of the Rev. Solomon Stoddard, by whom he had eleven children.

Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758) was the fifth child and only son of Timothy and Esther. His "sixty feet of sisters"—for the Edwardses were a tall family—were Esther, Elizabeth, Anne, Mary—his seniors—and Eunice, Abigail, Jerusha, Hannah, Lucy, and Martha, Jonathan gave early evidence of being a scholar and a thinker. He entered Yale at thirteen and received his A. M. when he was twenty. Seven years later he married Sarah Pierpont, a 17-year-old girl described as of striking beauty and intelligence, whose father was one of the founders of Yale. "A sweeter couple I have not seen," George Whitefield wrote of them in his diary. They had the following children: Sarah, Jerusha, Esther, Mary, Lucy, Timothy, Susanmah, Eunice, Jonathan, Jr. Ellzabeth and Pierpont. Of the eleven, seven were born on Sunday.

For twenty-four years Mr. Edwards was settled over a church in Northampton, Massachusetts. At the end of that time he was persecuted for righteousness' sake and dismissed. He was thus left, at the age of forty-seven, with a family of eight children at home and no income. "His prospects were apparently ruined," his biographer remarks; "but in fact the period of his greatest activity, in which he laid the foundations of his enduring fame, was thus ushered in." He went to Stockbridge, Massachusetts, then a wilderness, and became a missionary to the Jonathan Edwards, Jr. (1745-1801), second president of Union College, was the second son and ninth child of President Edwards, and was graduated from Princeton in 1765.

He went back to Princeton, but two weeks later sent an undergraduate to bring Esther and her mother. They arrived on Saturday, May 27, 1752, and on the following Monday there was a wedding at the president's house.

Contemporaries said of Mr. Burr that he was "modest in prosperity, prudent in difficulty, indefatigable in business, magnaminous in danger, easy in man-which Franklin Bowditch Dexter. In "Yale Biographies," begins his brief sketch of President Edwards.

The pioneer of the family of which Jonathan was the most illustrious member was William Edwards, a young Welshman who in 1646 came with his mother and his stepfather to Hartford. Connecticut. William married Agnes Spencer, and had one son, Richard, born in 1647. By his first wife, Elizabeth Tuttle, Richard had six children; of these the eldest son, Timothy, born in 1669, was the father of Jonathan Timothy graduated from Harvard at the age of twenty-two, receiving the degrees of A. B. and A. M. on the same day—"an uncommon mark of respect."

President Burr's son, Aaron Burr, (1756-1836), was left a double orphan at the age of two, and was brought up by his uncle, Timothy Edwards, himself scarcely more than a youth. Aaron was a wilful child but fond of study and quick to learn. At 11 he was ready for Princeton, but had to wait two years because of his age. During the Revolutionary war, he entered the army as a private and rose to be a lieutenant-colonel. After the war he became the second pastor of Park Street church, Boston where he served from 1817 to 1826.

LEAVES FROM OLD ALBUMS

THE LATE JOHN DILWORTH, ABOUT 1866,

Many old timers well remember Mr Dilworth, who was a cabinet furson City in 1855, but when the settlers there were recalled on account of the impending invasion of Utah, he went on to California, where he remained some years. This picture shows him as he looked about 1866, as he returned and engaged in business here a number of years. His family then removed o California, and he died there at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Minnie dwardr some years ago, though his remains were buried in this city. His two daughters, Minule and Frances, and one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth D. Nebeker, still survive him. Mr. Dilworth's wife was Josephine Mumford, daughter of Edward T. Mumford.

Before his term expired, Burr killed Alexander Hamilton in a duel. After that his fortunes declined. In 1807 he was tried for treason, and though acquitted he has been under suspicion even to this day. That he had brilliant parts in a commanding intellect, no one can question, and in recent years defenders have arisen to plead in his behalf; but though he may not have been as black as he was painted, the verdict of history should not lightly be set aside. He has been called the one "black sheep" of the Edwards descendants.

descendants. After Aaron Burr, the most famous of the grandsons of Jonathan Edwards, of the grandsons of Jonathan Edwards, was Timothy Dwight, (1751-1871), eighth president of Yale, and one of the great holders of that office. His mother, Mary Edwards, was only 18 years his senior. She had 13 children, and her descendants, as will be seen, have done more to uphold the Intellectual prestige of the Edwards lineage than any other branch of the family.

of Yale, and delivered the memorial address.

Another great-grandson of Jonathan Edwards who achieved distinction was General Daniel Tyler (1799-1882), whose mother was a daughter of Timothy Edwards, Jonathan's elder son. General Tyler was not a college president, but a soldier and a captain of industry. He was a graduate of West Point and a brigadier-general in the civil war. At different times he was president of several railroads and had extensive interests in iron and steel manufactories. After finally leaving the military service in 1884, he established large cotton and iron industries in Alabama, and was one of the founders of the fown of Anniston.

Edwards Amasa Park (1808-1900,) belonged by marriage to this generation of the Edwards family, his wife being Ann Maria, daughter of William Edwards and granddaughter of Timothy wards and granddaughter of Timothy Edwards. Dr. Park was for a long time president of Andover Theological Seminary, and was called "the Ando-ver giant," because of his great height and commanding intellect.

THE FIFTH GENERATION.

The twelfth president of Yale, grand-sen and namesake of Timothy Dwight, was born in 1828, and is still living in 1806. He was president of Yale from 1886 to 1898, is a fertile writer, and has held many hoperable positions.

held many honorable positions.

Another noted grandson of the elder Timothy Dwight was the late Theodore William Dwight, (1822-1892), who founded the Columbia Law school and was its warden for 35 years.

Three other celebrities, all of them college presidents, belong by marriage to the fifth generation of the house of Edwards. One is Nicholas Murray But-Edwards. One is Nicholas Murray But-ler, the young and progressive head of Columbia University. Before reach-ing his present position—to which he was elected in 1902, in succession to Seth Low—Dr. Butler was president of the Teacher's college in New York and of the National educational associa-tion. His wife who died in 1903, was Susannah Edwards Schuyler, whose mother. Susannah Edwards, grand-daughter of Jenathan Edwards' son Timothy, married Jacob Rutsen Schuyothy, married Jacob Rutsen Schuywards.

Last to be mentioned in this fifth gen-tration is Egbert Coffin Smyth (1829-1904), who succeeded Dr. Edwards Park as president of the Andover Theological Seminary.

President Park's wife was Elizabeth Bradford Dwight, granddaughter of the first Timothy Dwight of Yale.

THE SIXTH AND SEVENTH GENERATIONS.

In the sixth and seventh generations of the family we find, among Jonathan Edwards' direct descendants, the names of one college president, Dr. Merrill E. Gates: one prominent professor and scientist, Dr. Charles Sedgwick Minot; scientist, Dr. Charles Sedgwick Minot; and a successful author. Winston Churchill. And if we include those who have married into the house of Edwards, we reach the culmination of the presidential strain in the late chief magistrate of the United States; for a granddaughter of General Daniel Tyler is the wife of Theodore Roosevelt. Charles SedgwickMinot descends from Timothy Edwards, son of the great

Charles SedgwickMinot descends from Timothy Edwards, son of the great Jonathan, by another line, which again combines the names of Edwards and Dwight. Timothy's daughter ishoda married Josiah Dwight; their daughter, Elizabeth Buckminster Dwight, became the wife of Charles Sedgwick; and their daughter was the mother of Charles Sedgwick Minot. Dr. Minot, a leading professor at the Harvard Medical school and a recognized authority in biology and embryology, has been president of a number of learned societies.

Finally, in no descendant of President Edwards does the presidential blood seem to run more strongly than in Merrill Edwards Gates, whose mother, Fanny Jeanette Parsons, was the great-grand-daughter of Sarah, eldest daughter of Jonathan Edwards. Born in 1848 and graduated from the University of Rochester in 1873, 12 years later he was appointed president of Rutgers. After eight years at Rutgers, he was elected to the headship of Amherst and of Oberlin in the same week. He accepted the former post, which he held for nine years.
